PARIS, October 16.

Yesterday morning the once all powerful and beautiful Marie Antoinette, comfort of the unfortunate Louis, King of France, was brought like the maniac malefactor from the vile prison of the Conciergerie, and placed at the criminal bar of the revolutionary tribunal.

After the examination had closed, the Queen was soon condemned, "as guilty of having been accessory to, and having co-operated in different macabres against the liberty of France; of having entertained a correspondence with the enemies of the republic; of having participated in a plotting to kindle civil war in the interior of the republic, by arming citizens against each other."

When the sentence was read, the Queen cast down her eyes and did not raise them again. "Have you nothing to reply up on the determination of the law?" said the president to her. "Nothing," she replied. He then addressed himself to her pleaders, "And you officious defenders?" "Our mission is fulfilled with respect to the widow Capet," said they.

This morning (the 16th) this unhappy victim of democratic fury was ignominiously carried to the place of execution in a common cart. The whole armed force of Paris was on foot from the palace of justice to the Place de la Revolution. The streets lined by two very close rows of armed citizens. The Queen was in a white loose dress—but they had tied her arms behind her. As she passed along the multitude cried out Bravo!—At the place of execution she looked firmly around her on all sides. She was accompanied by the ci-devant curate of St. Landry, a constitutional priest, and on the scaffold preserved her natural dignity of mind.

BRUSSELS, October 22.

The great and bloody battle, which should have crowned all the former victories of the campaign, and from which we expected such brilliant success, was fought on the 15th and 16th inst. unfortunately to the disadvantage of the combined armies.

You will have seen that the government has thought fit to tell the public, in the official Bulletins. But the facts, you may be assured, are such as I have stated.

The loss of our army is 5000 men killed and wounded, among whom are 115 officers. The prince of Anhalt-Kaunheim, who commanded the dragons of Cobourg, on the left, was struck down by a shot, and it is not known whether he fell dead or alive into the hands of the enemy.

The French attacked us in all points at once, with from 70,000 to 80,000, commanded by General Jourdan; Gen. Dupont commanded their right—Levasseur and Bataille, the two representatives of the people, appeared sword in hand at the head of their combatants, whom they animated with loud cries of exhortation to advance, and as loudly menaced when they seemed to hesitate. Behind their first line, an immense number of women, without fear or disorder, supplied the soldiers with ammunition, distributed brandy among them, and carried off the wounded; such were the means by which they obtained a victory over our brave and veteran troops.

The English, who came up just as the battle was beginning, were not in a condition to display their accustomed valour and intrepidity. They were exhausted by the fatigues of a forced march of nine leagues. Their cavalry were out of order, that they were unable to act.

The day before yesterday 400

French prisoners, and 39 waggons loads of the wounded, arrived here. The night after, came a convoy of 52 waggons, with the wounded of the regiments of Cobourg and Kunitz; and yesterday morning 63 waggons, with the wounded of several other regiments. Where to lay these unfortunate victims of war we know not. All the hospitals and all the convents are already full. Lint, bandages, and attendants on the sick, are advertised for. On Saturday last the general return of the Austrians wounded in the Pays Bas, was 6,440.

The prince of Saxe Cobourg writes in strong terms of the danger to which Austrian Flanders is now exposed; that without a reinforcement of fifty thousand men at least, he cannot answer for maintaining his present position; that he expects to be attacked in a few days; and that the French have augmented their army of the north, to 170,000 men. He complains of the Dutch, and even of the English. The instant that troops arrive here they are sent to join the army; as are all the stores and ammunition, which arrive in quantities, almost incredible, from Holland.

October 24.

By advices from the combined army, we learn, that since the Austrian army, under the command of Prince Cobourg, raised the siege of Maastricht, and passed the Sambre, nothing of importance has passed between the French and the allied troops. Our troops have not yet made any movement, but remain still posted behind the Sambre, whilst the French army, under Gen. Jourdan, are on the other side of that river, the greater part of our battering cannon and heavy stores have been carried to Boulogne, near Mons; the troops of Holland are also encamped in the environs of that place; the head quarters of Prince Cobourg are at Bay. It is very probable that nothing interesting will pass on this side, the campaign being too far advanced for the allies to make an attempt on any strong places of the enemy; besides, their armies are very much diminished, not only by the losses sustained in the different engagements (which have succeeded each other with a rapidity of which history furnishes no similar example,) but also by sickness and desertion; the English army, commanded by the Duke of York, is weakened by a detachment of 25000 men, who have embarked at Ostend to return to England, where preparations are making to defend a project, formed by the French, for making a descent on that kingdom. On the side of West Flanders, the enemy do not allow a moment's repose to the cordon of troops who cover that part of our frontiers; there likewise has been a smart action in the neighbourhood of Furnes. All the inhabitants of the neighbourhood have retired into the interior part of the country, flying before the French, who plunder and burn their habitations.

It appears that the states of each of the Belgic Provinces have at last determined to afford succours both in men and money to the emperor. These succours, so long deferred under various pretexts are the more necessary from the circumstance that the time has not yet arrived for the house of Austria to reap the fruits of an expensive war, of which, doubtless it would not have to sustain the burden, had it not been for the proximity of the Low-Countries to France. Several Chapters and Abbeys have made loans, the produce of which is destined to be turned into the public treasury.

DEAL, October 28.

This morning Sir Charles Grey, General Dundas, Colonel Jervis,

Major Maidland, &c. arrived at the Three Kings Hotel, and after partaking of a cold refreshment, immediately embarked on board the Quebec frigate, and sailed for Ostend with Admiral Macbride. An express arrived here early this morning to the Admiral, to say, that the troops on board the transports at Plymouth and Portsmouth viz. the 3d, 28th, 54th and 29th regiments, bound to the West Indies &c. had (instead) been ordered to proceed to Ostend immediately, as that place is in hourly expectation of being invested by the French troops, and without a considerable reinforcement can hold out but a very short time.

October 20.

A detachment of the guards, amounting to six hundred men will embark on Friday next, under the command of Major General Grinfield, to join the army under his royal highness the Duke of York.

The very critical situation, in which Ostend was known to be on the evening of the 23d, and the Flanders mail due yesterday not having yet arrived, gave birth to a variety of reports.—We shall mention only that which, willing it to be true, we think the most probable.

A letter is said to be received from commodore Murray, dated October 26, stating that having found means to communicate with Major Mathews, the commanding officer of the 53d regiment at Nieuport, Major Mathews determined on making a vigorous resistance; and that by the aid of three guns planted on the sands in such a situation as to seem under cover of the guns of the ships, although in reality the ships were prevented by the wind from affording them any effectual protection, the French were checked in their approach and their attack repelled. It is added that the 53d lost seventeen men and two officers.

NEW-YORK, January 16.

Captain Dodge, of the ship Atreus, who arrived in this port last evening from Ostend, in forty seven days, informs, that since the raising of the siege of Nieuport, nothing of consequence had happened between the French and combined armies at the time he left Ostend—it was given out, that the English and Dutch troops were immediately to go into winter quarters, and the Austrians were to keep the field.

Extract of a letter received last Saturday, by a gentleman in this city, dated Dublin, October 29.

An express to the lord lieutenant, brings intelligence, that the prince de Cobourg had surrounded and beaten the French army, by which the latter lost 40,000 men. The Austrians having seized the river Sambre, forced all their works. The glory of the day, was some degree, owing to a successful feint of the prince de Cobourg's falling back, by which he ensnared and turned the left flanks of the French line.

Extract of a letter from on board his Majesty's ship Couragex, dated off Sardinia.

Monsieur St. Julian, late commander of the French fleet at Toulon, after proceeding for Marseilles, returned in disguise, without entering that city, and fearing equally from the resentment of the Toulonense and the National Convention, he came to the determination of trusting to the clemency of Lord Hood, and actually got on board the Victory, and surrendered himself to the British Admiral, who with that clemency that ever accompanies a British officer, put him on board a frigate destined for Barcelona, in order completely to put him out of reach of any resentment his countrymen might entertain against him."

Dispatches from Citizen Genet, at Philadelphia, to Citizen Hauntrieve.

The Duke of York is taken with his whole army. Toulon is retaken with every ship which were in the port and harbor. All this, my dear fellow citizen, has been announced to the Congress, not officially, but as certain.—The Congress could not stay in their sitting.—The whole people in Philadelphia are in the greatest joy, and their compliments and salutations are coming to me from every part. It appears to be certain, that this news was brought in by the vessel sent to France by the President. Let all our friends know this news—and let us cry out together, "Vive la Republique!"

(Signed) GENET.

PHILADELPHIA, January 9.

The November packet is arrived at Halifax, and has set sail for England again. One important piece of intelligence brought by this vessel, which bears the stamp of probability, and has not yet been communicated to the American public, is, that a peace has been proposed by the Cabinet of St. James's, who feared a revolution of the people, a descent from France, a national bankruptcy and the effect of the defection of Prussia and the United Netherlands.

This peace is to be settled upon the basis of the ancient relations between France and England; but the United States are to be left without countenance from either party, no new advantage is to be granted to her commerce, and her means of aggrandisement are not to be assisted.

To give success to this negotiation, the Court of London has communicated confidentially to the executive council, an exact account of the tame conduct of the American government towards France, during the war. This communication has not had all the effect the English Ministry intended it to produce, to the disadvantage of the American interest and character. France will never forget her elder sister republic, the country where liberty had birth; but the delusion of a people too frank and open to resist the insidious designs of her secret enemies ought to be no more, and it is time they should shrink from the precipice on the brink of which they stand.

January 16.

Yesterday morning arrived the ship American, George Blight, from Lisbon, who left that place the fifth of November, in company with a number of American vessels under a convoy of two 74 gunships, two 36 gun frigates and two 20 gun brigs, granted by the Queen of Portugal as a protection against the Algerines.

February 1.

The captain of a vessel arrived this week from Ireland brings word, that half of a company of 1800 horse which were landed at Ostend from England were cut off by the French two days after their arrival. The captain himself sold horses to those who were sent to supply the deficiency occasioned by their loss.

Après gang at Plymouth, he also informs, that had been attacked, and the whole number, except two, killed by the populace.

A French ship of twenty guns is arrived at Norfolk: she has been firing almost incessantly since arrival on account of the late success of the French armies against the combined despots: the particulars have not yet been published, but the officers of the ship say that their affairs are in the most prosperous state: that rebellion has ceased and since the dismissal of the nobility from their army and navy, that treachery is banished and one spirit now pervades the whole republic.

SACRED TO THE MUSES.

TIME.

THE rolling tide that climbs
along the shore,
Finding its period, back recoils
again;
Its hour returned, renews its wondered roar,
And sweeps impetuous o'er the thrifty plain.

But fleeting time, forever on the wing,
Pursues fatuity, nor knows delay;
Still age advances as the moments
spring,
No kind reflux retards their circling day.

Onward the seasons take their annual round,
And unperceived, contract the life of man,
Eternity expands the gaping bound
And every moment ends some mortal's span.

Thrice happy they, who like the
busied bee,
Ne'er let the passing moments
move in vain,
The near approach of death un-mould'd they see,
Nor does the awful summons
cause them pain.

Receding life they quit with eager
joy,
All heaven, expanding opens to
their eyes,
Death only can their mortal parts
destroy,
While Angels waft their spirits to the skies.

Anecdote.

AN English wit was observing the other day, that from the PUR-PAST style of the French Generals, he imagined they had once been cooks: "There is no doubt of that," replied a Yankee, "and they have lately proved themselves good Cooks, in dishing up to handsomely your countrymen near Dunkirk."
